

DONATION

Prone on a table, lifeless and cold
Is this what happens when we become old?
Only to some, the brave and the few
Who donate themselves as the last thing they do.

We donate our clothes, spare change, and old shoes
We give away things that we don't care to lose.
But to donate yourself, for the good of another
Is a donation so special, it's unlike any other.

Your body complete, from head to toe
Taught more people than than you could possibly know.
You gave the very last thing you could give
And because of your gift, others will live.

It's an incredible thing, to do what you've done.
I wish I could thank you, and meet the one
Who was so giving, so thoughtful, so great
Whose last request, was to donate.

—Travis Barlock

University of Colorado School of Medicine